A GAME OF BLUFF

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Adrian Ogilthorpe, a steady, matter of fact fellow, was engaged to Lucy Ashurst, a butterfly. Ogilthorpe was much in love with his fiancée, but one thing about her troubled him very much. After settling his affections upon one girl he had no desire whatever to pay any attention to any other and could not see why Lucy must needs accept the attentions of other men.

One day he remonstrated with her upon what he called flirting after her engagement to him and told her that if she continued it he would break the engagement. A young girl—Lucy, at any rate—is like a child whose ruling passion is to carry disobedience as far as possible without getting a whipping. Lucy let her lover "scold," as she called it, to his heart's content without making a reply. While he was "laying down the law" to her—this was also an expression of hers with regard to his lectures—she was laying plans for breaking his injunctions.

During the next few weeks after this "laying down the law" Lucy flirted more than ever. Adrian bore it stoically till he had made up his mind to carry out his threats, then wrote her a note breaking the engagement.

Lucy, who had expected something of the kind and was prepared for it, paid no attention to his note whatever.

That which a child most dreads is "the dark." On the same principle that which an adult most dreads is uncertainty. If Lucy had pleaded with him, upbraided him, even scorned him, he would have been ready for her, but to be left without any notice whatever of his discharging her was like the child in the dark—it appalled him.

But Ogilthorpe was a methodical chap, and as soon as he got on his thinking cap he solved the problem. Either Lucy was ready to break with him for some other man or she was bluffing. If it was for another man the fact would soon be apparent; if she was bluffing that was a game at which two could play. Moreover, if she had replaced him in her affections he was not likely to win her back again, for, he argued, women who crave a multiplicity of lovers are not apt to return to an old one. They must have something new.

Adrian waited for developments. Lucy when under his observation at functions would look lovingly upon her attendant, but Adrian thought she overdid it, that she was doing it for his benefit. Time passed, and he did not hear of her encouraging any particular man. Then, beginning to tire of the estrangement, he began to lay his plans to bring about a more definite situation. He had thus far treated her as an acquaintance, a friend. He now began to bow to her when he met her with extraordinary politeness. Lucy retailed by out-herding Herod. If he bowed low to her she returned his civility with a cordiality that might have been gratifying to a stranger, but not to a man to whom she had been engaged.

Then came a period of self reproach to Adrian for his sudden and decided breaking off of the engagement. Had he not placed an insurmountable barrier between him and the girl he loved? She could not seek him. If they were to get together again he must go to her. And what would that involve? Nothing less than an apology for his action and begging her forgiveness.

This is the usual outcome between man and woman, but this is an unusual case. If he succumbed it would mean that, provided he was forgiven, he would marry a woman whose love for admiration would outweigh her love for her husband.

The panic induced by the thought that he had raised an insurmountable barrier between them having been allayed, Adrian determined to play a card that up to this time he would have scorned to play. Indeed, he had never thought of playing it till it had been suggested to him.

"What is the matter between you and Lucy Ashurst?" asked an attractive widow of him one day.

Adrian told her the story.

"That is very easily settled," she said.

"How?"

"You believe the lady is bluffing?"

"I am sure of it."

"Very well. We can soon find that out. Be my cavalier for awhile. If she has turned from you to another she will not mind your devotion to me. If she still loves you she will make peace at once."

"It will require some time, I suppose?"

"Not if I know my sex."

During the next function at which these three conspirators met Mr. Ogilthorpe devoted himself to the widow, or, rather, the widow devoted herself to Mr. Ogilthorpe.

"Did you see that scared look on her face?" she asked him when they passed Miss Ashurst.

"No. Did you?"

"Certainly. She may not be afraid of you, but she is deathly scared of me. You will hear from her very soon."

And he did. The next day he received a note from Lucy begging him to come and see her. He went and found her penitent. At least she pretended to be penitent, because she supposed by the severe look her lover assumed that he would stand no more fooling. Really she was ready to try the same prank again as soon as she dare take the chances.

The Phillies have this year passed so far without any injuries incurring the team. Last season Manager Dooin expected to place his team well at the top of the race but misfortune befell him in the clothing of injuries. Four or five of his best men were kept out of the game for long spells and his hopes were blighted. Dooin says that his club is fit for the battle this season and will finish on top.

LUNG SERUM CURE AIDS LEA'S WIFE

Tennessee Senator Sends Her to Sanatorium That Restored Kern's Health.

Washington, May 29.—Interest of senators in the von Ruck anti-tuberculosis serum when cured Senator Kern, Democratic leader of the upper house, increased yesterday when it became known that the wife of Senator Lake Rea of Tennessee is now receiving the same treatment at Dr. von Ruck's sanatorium at Asheville, N. C.

Mrs. Lea has been at several sanatoriums and only about two weeks ago was removed to Dr. von Ruck's, and, although said to be in an advanced stage of the disease, she is reported to have been benefited by Dr. von Ruck's treatment.

All the senators are deeply interested in her recovery, because of the heroic and prolonged fight she has been making against the disease. Two years ago her husband, a stalwart athlete, underwent a transfusion of his blood to flow into his wife's veins. Temporarily strengthened, but still in grave danger, Mrs. Lea a month later was rushed in a special train to Denver. There she partly regained her health.

The resolution of Senator Overman of North Carolina, which passed the upper house by unanimous vote on Monday, has already borne fruit. Surg. Gen. Rupert Blue in charge of the public health bureau and who was directed by the Senate to make a thorough investigation of the serum, said that no time would be lost in obtaining cultures and distributing them among government hospitals for tests. Dr. von Ruck has already placed his serum at the disposal of the naval medical school and experiments are being made there.

NOT A REAL MINT JULEP.

Louisville Folk Disgusted With Roosevelt Recipe.

Louisville, Ky., May 29.—Col. Roosevelt never drank any real mint juleps at all. He brewed the mint, an unpardonable offense, according to experts. "Marse Henry" Waterson and his kind waited to hear no more. Mint leaves stirred in? Help! Then they must have been bruised. Twa'n't a mint julep at all.

When Louisville read Henry Pinckney's recipe for a mint julep Louisville promptly lost interest in the doings at Marquette.

MIKADO IS WELL AGAIN.

Japan's Emperor in Normal Health—Empress Has Recovered, Too.

Tokio, May 29.—Emperor Yoshihito has recovered from his recent indisposition and is in normal health again, according to an announcement yesterday by the royal physicians, who attended him. The empress, too, has recovered from her cold, and all anxiety has fled from the Aoyama palace.

DEGREE FOR VERMONT.

Was Conferred on W. F. Weeks of Shelburne.

New York, May 29.—The degree of doctor of divinity was yesterday conferred on William Farrar Weeks, recently appointed bishop coadjutor-elect of Vermont of Shelburne, by Dean Robinson at the 95th commencement exercises of the general theological seminary.

It is rumored throughout the National league that Manager Evers has asked for waivers on Ed Reulbach, the former Barre pitcher. Reulbach has been successful in his role as a pitcher for the Cubs since the time when he left Vermont. It is safe to presume that not all of the clubs in the league will pass him up, especially Boston. Reulbach is a warm weather pitcher and has lots of stuff left yet.
